

CHAPTER VI

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTIONS

This chapter present the conclusion of the research and the suggestions for the future research after the researcher analyzes and interprets at the acquired data from the previous chapter. The conclusion is covered from the statement of the research to the next researchers who are interested in conducting the similar research.

6.1. Conclusion

Based upon the analysis of finding and discussion towards the finding in the previous chapter, the researcher drew some conclusions in regard of answering the problems of research. The researcher had found out that with the aim of making the main characters attached to the readers, the writer used some method and technique to portray the main character realistically. This research had discovered four methods of characterization used in the novel Fish in a Tree based on Kenney theory which are dramatic method, character on character method, contextual method and mixed method. Meanwhile, the characterization in this novel also can be viewed from techniques of three dimensions by Egri Lajos which are physiological, sociological and psychological. All of them, the methods and techniques of characterization interrelated and combine together in presenting the complexness of characters.

Based on the analysis and discussion, the researcher found out that Ally, Albert and Keisha's character have some similarities depicting the characteristics of adolescent learner. However, each of them possessed their dominant traits that make each of them unique and stand out from their surroundings.

6.2. Suggestions

The researcher admits there are some obstacles in this research. Regarding the result of the study, the researcher addressed suggestion for the future researcher on how the study of character is important toward Indonesian education especially in the era that continues to experience the demands of change along with the revolution in various fields. For the readers, it is suggested to not judge people only from one aspects because human are a complex-beings that cannot simply be judge from what appears on the outside. The aspects of mind, feeling, and other psychological aspects are also important to be taken in account in order to build a better relationship in the society.
