Introduction

The approach of Content and Language Integrated Learning (CLIL) has been mushrooming nowadays especially in the countries where English is used as foreign language. Integrating the teaching of various academic subjects is needed to respond the increasing awareness to preserve culture and values embedded in it. CLIL states that in the CLIL or it is also called as Bilingual Education, the language is used as a medium of instruction in a limited number of subjects.

To improve the quality of teaching English in schools, teachers are required to be more creative. However, the importance to revisit the purpose of teaching foreign language in schools context, first. Like the saying "killing two birds with a stone".

To improve the quality of teaching English in Indonesian Islamic s, teachers are required to be more creative. However, it is of ance to revisit the purpose of teaching foreign language in Islamic s context, first. Like the saying "killing two birds with a stone", the teaching of English is intended at achieving two purposes simultaneously. As a language, English is taught for a purpose of improving language skills and knowledge of language components. The mastery of language is then used in learning religious books written in English. In this matter, students of Islamic schools, including those in English Department at State Institute of Islamic Studies (IAIN) Tulungagung, are expected to master the target language (read English) and use it for learning Islam. As a teacher of English in Islamic Institute, the writer is challenged to integrate Islamic values in the teaching of language, in this case speaking skill.

B. Discussion

1. Models of Content and Language Integrated Learning (CLIL)

Some success stories about the implementation of CLIL are provoking especially in the countries where English is used as a second language (outer circle of English). According to Brinton et al. (2002:447) at university level, the suitable models of CLIL are, at least, of three types, namely theme-based, sheltered content, and adjunct courses. However, the one fits to the purpose of teaching of English in Islamic schools must in order that the integration of Islamic values gain a success.

The first model of CLIL is theme-based language instruction. Theme-based or also recognized as topic-based language instruction is a way to improve the use of foreign language in the classroom. In this model, language class is structured into several themes in which the topics develop the stem of the curriculum. As an illustration, in a semester consisting of 14 weeks, the language class is organized into several unrelated topics such as noise, heart disease, parents' affection, and so on. The topic might be presented in reading activity and vocabulary presented through guided discussion. A theme-based language instruction offers a number of advantages. One, in a general traditional class themes (contents) are structured, it does not emphasize on the content. Yet, the emphasis is on improving students' language skills.

...-based language instruction, which is not optimized for teaching. Two, theme-based instruction is different from the general traditional in which topics are usually restricted to a single activity such as reading or listening exercise. Meanwhile, in a theme-based instruction, the topic is integrated in the teaching of all skills.

The second model of CLIL is sheltered content instruction. The salient feature of sheltered content instruction is the existence of a native speaker content area specialist (professor) who teaches in a foreign language classroom. Brinton (2003) explains that sheltered content instruction put the students and teacher in the same linguistic "boat" which enables the students to take benefit from the adjustment and simplification made by native speaker teacher. The main difference between sheltered content instruction and theme-based instruction is that sheltered content instruction requires the existence of institutional support such as high school or higher education. Sheltered content instruction requires certain modification made for the second language acquisition. For example, the texts are carefully organized for clarity or the instructor makes some adjustments for listening. In addition, in a sheltered content instruction, receptive skills receive more emphasis than productive skills.

The third model of CLIL is adjunct instruction. In this model, language and content are connected concurrently – language course and content course – with the idea that the two courses share the content base and complement each other. Second language learners are sheltered and supported in the content course, where both native and nonnative English speaking students attend the same lecture. This model of CLIL requires a coordination to make sure that both interlocking curricula complement each other. To make it clear, the following is presented the summary of the three models of CLIL.

Table 1. Distinguishing Features of Three Models of CLIL (Brimacombe, 2003:19)

	Theme-Based	Sheltered Content	Adjusted Content
Primary Purposes	Help Students develop L2 competence within specific areas	Help students master content materials	Help students master content materials Introduce students to academic discourse develop transferrable academic skills
Instructional format	ESL course	Content course	Linked content and ESL course
Instructional responsibilities	Language instructor responsible for language and content instruction	Content instructor responsible for content instruction Incidental language learning	Content instructor responsible for content instruction Language instructor responsible for language instruction
Student population	Nonnative speakers	Nonnative speakers	Nonnative and native speakers integrated for content instruction
Focus of Evaluation	Language skills and function	Content Mastery	Content mastery (in content class) Language skills and functions (in language class)

Regarding the above features, a theme based language ion is a suitable one to be adapted in Islamic schools because it is easy matter to hire native speaker expert to teach in Islamic
. The problem of fund often becomes the hindrance for hiring peaker expert.

Rationale for Integrating Islamic Values and Speaking Activities

Adapting Content and Language Integrated Learning theory is ble. Students will learn contents and language simultaneously. It that efficiency in language learning can be enhanced to this The following is the discussion about the rationales for integrating values and speaking activities:

Subject learning and language learning should take place at the same time.

CLIL defines language learning as "subjects are taught through a language with dual focused aims, namely the learning of content a simultaneous learning of a foreign language" (Pulverness, 2005).
It is assumed that the two subjects, content and language, are e subjects. Because there is a clear cut of the materials, the g is also separated, meaning-focused and linguistics- focused. er, Heine (2010) states that language is the most dominant means munication and instruction through which relation is developed eaning is negotiated. In short, language occurs in the teaching of t and language. Therefore, integrating the content and language is cial for language learners. In relation to the teaching of English in school, integrating Islamic values and English will help students oth materials.

egrated learning provides more exposure and input of English.

One of the factors contributing to students' learning foreign ge is the adequacy of input. In an integrated learning, students do not only learn English as a subject but also as a medium of instruction. In a medium of instruction, especially in speaking class, English is likely to be used more in performing academic tasks. This means that students will practice using the language more. In other words, they get more exposure as a source for language acquisition. As they get more exposure for learning and communication, they will make significant gain in their language proficiency.

c) Integrated learning provides more language output.

Fauziati (2005) states that comprehensible input alone is not a sufficient condition for second language acquisition. Students should be encouraged to produce target language comprehensible output. The problem is sometimes they get stuck to very routine activities and limited topic in the classroom. However, through the integration of content and language subjects, students will get more exercises especially those that deal with the topics of religious matter. For instance, when the students practice doing a sermon, they learn the content (topics of religion) at the same time with learning how to organize ideas and present them in a comprehensible output.

3. Strategies in Integrating Islamic Values and Speaking Skill

Regarding the necessity of integrating content and language in a foreign language class, the writer attempts to integrate Islamic values in a speaking class. The reason for integrating Islamic values and speaking is due to the fact that speaking is a productive skill through which students will get much input and exposure to the use of English in a more real situation. In other words, it is a speaking class with Islamic contents.

a) Selecting the Topics

In Indonesia, the formal education is not only held of the Ministry of National Education (MONE), but also the Ministry of Religious Affairs.

The quality of education should meet the standards set up by the MORAs. For schools under the supervision of the MORAs, there is an additional standard to be reached, that is to teach religious messages through Islamic higher education which enjoy more autonomy in the teaching-learning process. Therefore, education in Islamic schools must be a "National Plus" where the standards of education are higher than the national standards and include the internalization of religious awareness.

To meet the aforementioned standard, the first step to do is to develop a syllabus. In addition to ordinary syllabus development, the syllabus is carefully designed by determining the religious topics to be included. For fourteen meetings, excluding mid-test and final-test, at least thirteen topics to be determined. It is so doing because at the beginning usually the topic is not yet about religion. The variation of topics upon simple topic such as greetings according to Islam until a more difficult topic like the differences in deciding the first date of Ramadan.

Selecting Classroom Activities

Along with selecting the topic, classroom activities are also determined by considering the compatibility with the topic. For instance, the topic of greeting will be carried out through conversations. In general, the consideration for designing classroom activities is the complexity of the topic. The more difficult the topic is, the more complex the classroom activity will be.

The following is an example of classroom activities in which religious topics are integrated with speaking activities:

3.2. Examples of Integrated Content and Language Classroom Activities

Activities	Topic	Classroom Activities
Students can introduce	Greeting in Islam	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Pair work in which students are themselves in a good manner introducing to each other using Islamic manner of greeting like saying 'salam':

"Assalamu'alaikum wa rahmatullahi wa barakatuh"

- Students discuss the implied meaning of their salam and the importance of doing it

Students prove a knowledge and understanding about respecting others

Doing good deeds to parents

- Role playing the story of Malin Kundang
- Discussing moral values of the story

Students shows the feeling of sympathy to others

Natural Disaster according to the perspective of Muslims

- Speech with topic about natural disaster
- Role play about natural disaster

Students can deliver an idea about religion through a speech

Differences in deciding the 1st date of Ramadhan

- Preach in which students are assigned to deliver a speech on such topic viewed from different perspectives

Student can interpret the verses in al Qur'an and al Hadith through spoken language

Doing pilgrimage out of DzulHijjah according to al Qur'an and al Hadith

- Classroom debate

C. Conclusion

Since the teaching of English in Islamic schools is directed to achieve two purposes, for acquiring language skill and using the language skill to learn religion, integrating Islamic values is a must. In this case, the teacher is urged to be more creative in selecting the topics and classroom

The classroom activities should be designed in such a way that enables the students to use their thinking and reasoning capabilities. Giving speech, preach, or debate about religious matters are strategies to achieve the abovementioned goals of teaching English in Islamic
