Research on the religiosity of Muslims in the blessed Friday phenomenon that occurs at the Kademangan Jami' at-taqwa mosque. This research seeks to find out the religiosity values of the Friday prayer congregation at the mosque as well as the religiosity of the people who have shared in the Friday Blessing activities at the two mosques. This research uses Stark and Glock's theory of religiosity values. The research uses a qualitative descriptive method with an observation and interview approach. Information was obtained from the mosque takmir, Friday prayer congregation, and the community who shared in the Friday Blessing activities. The data is processed through narrative analysis to describe the religiosity values that are generated from these activities. The results of the research show that the blessed Friday activities held at the Jami' At-taqwa mosque took place informally, there were no special sequences in them but they were carried out well. The Friday Blessing activities at the Jami' At-Taqwa mosque involve food distribution activities and mosque cleaning activities which have a positive impact on the community or congregation who run it and also have an impact on the mosque. This activity strengthens the congregation's spiritual connection with Allah SWT, increases social solidarity, and revitalizes the mosque as a center of worship. Blessing Friday activities themselves can foster a social spirit and provide religious benefits for anyone involved in these activities. Participating in Friday Blessing activities can increase the religiosity of the congregation and community through
