Dear Editors

We sincerely apologise for the delay in paying the APC, as we were not yet sure of the exact amount in USD or JD that we need to pay for the three authors from Indonesia.

We are committed to making the payment this week once you inform us of the total amount due.

May we also kindly confirm whether our article will remain accepted and still be scheduled for publication in June 2026 once the APC payment is made?

Thank you for your understanding.

Sincerely yours

Abstract: This study examines the role of student-generated literary works in character education within Indonesian Islamic higher education. It aims to understand how literary methods support moral and ethical development alongside language skills in this cultural and religious context. The research uses a qualitative descriptive design, including document analysis, interviews, and classroom observations to collect detailed data on educational practices and student experiences. Findings show that incorporating Islamic themes and local cultural wisdom into literary activities strengthens students' character formation by fostering values such as integrity, responsibility, and social awareness. Student literary productions effectively promote critical thinking, empathy, and self-expression. The study also emphasizes the importance of curriculum design that integrates literary methods

2.3.3 Classroom observations

Classroom observations are employed to capture the dynamics of teaching and learning processes that encourage literary creativity and character development. Observations focus on instructional methods, student interactions, and the use of literary texts within the classroom setting. This method provides contextual data on how educators implement character education through literature and how students engage with these pedagogical approaches in real time. Observational data complement documentation and interview findings by offering a direct view of educational practices.

2.4 Data analysis procedures

The data collected through documentation, interviews, and observations are analyzed using a systematic qualitative approach inspired by the interactive model of Miles and Huberman (Miles and Huberman 1994). This model emphasizes three core activities: Data reduction, data display, and conclusion drawing/verification (Miles and Huberman 1994). Although some references (Major and Savin-Baden 2010; Al Faruq et al. 2024) discuss qualitative research synthesis broadly, this study applies the principles of the Miles and Huberman model specifically to enhance the rigor and depth of analysis in the context of character education research. Data reduction involves the process of selecting, focusing, and simplifying the raw data to identify relevant themes and patterns related to literary creativity and character education. This step includes coding textual data from interviews and documents, as well as field notes from observations. Data display is achieved through organized matrices, charts, and narrative summaries that facilitate the visualization of relationships and emerging themes. Finally, conclusion drawing and verification involve interpreting the data to develop meaningful insights and ensuring the credibility of findings through iterative review and triangulation across data
